Is the Moscow industrial real estate market getting back to normal?

The Moscow industrial real estate market is getting back to normal following last year's turbulence. The events of 2022 led to a surge in vacant space, which eventually caused the vacancy rate to hit 2.9%. Yet after three months of this year we see an acute shortage of premises for lease in the logistics market of the Moscow area once again.

Why is Moscow a logistics hub?

The Central District, particularly Moscow and its surrounding regions, serves as the largest and most developed logistics hub in Russia. Due to its strategic location, well-established infrastructure, and proximity to major consumer markets, this region dominates the country's warehouse market.
